HVAC Contractor Marketing Blog Strategy Guide

Building a blog for your HVAC business might seem like a mountain of work. Although, HVAC contractor marketing can be as simple as regularly sharing what you love, what you do, and how you do it on your company's blog.

Let's discuss some fundamental strategies on how you can build your own marketing battle plan using:

- Three main content buckets that allow you to easily drop ideas where they fit
- A "done-for-you," customizable editorial calendar download
- Simple pro-writing tips on blog style
- Brand voice to elicit trust

How an Effective Blog Strategy Impacts Your HVAC Contract Marketing

An overwhelming majority of consumers leverage the wealth of information on the internet to inform their purchase decisions.

In fact, "97% of people learn more about a local company via the internet," according to SEO Tribunal.

It's all about your business' visibility and relevance in an online search. The best way to optimize your HVAC company's site to appear in the most relevant, local search results is to create and maintain a blog.

The Three-H Content Strategy for HVAC Contractor Marketing

Hub Content - The Most Frequently Published Content Type

The first pillar of this strategy is the most common type of content you'll be generating for your company blog. These are the quick-snack posts that turn your site into a routine visit for your customers.

The Hub Content post will be the most common type of post filling out your editorial calendar.

The main characteristics of a Hub post:

- Shorter in nature
- Positioning your site as a daily visit
- Build on your community's interests
- More niche for your active customers

Use hub content to build your company's relevance and increase the stickiness of your brand in the minds of your loyal customers.

Help Content - The Most Searchable Content Type

Help content is wildly useful to your company's site in becoming the go-to resource for common maintenance tutorials. Consider creating how-to explainers on specific brand and equipment models to capture relevant search traffic.

For instance, customers can handle simple maintenance like:

- Replacing an air filter
- Basic A/C unit maintenance
- Cleaning leaves from the fan
- Cleaning the air intake grate

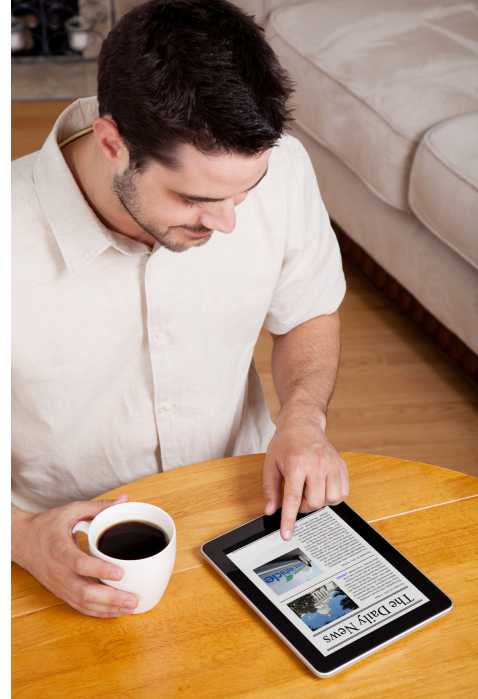

Use this content bucket to capture ideas for common symptoms and easy fixes to things that would take up your field team's time but wouldn't generate much income.

Hero Content - The Most In-Depth Content Type

The hero content will be your lengthiest posts. These will take the longest to create and may require research. Though, the investment you put into these posts will show their returns almost immediately.

Key elements of hero content include:

- Broader intended audience
- Less frequently released
- A higher overall quality
- Multimedia rich

Once you define these topics, create more hubs and help content that supports them. You may also find the smaller posts you created earlier may give you ideas for your larger hero content pieces.

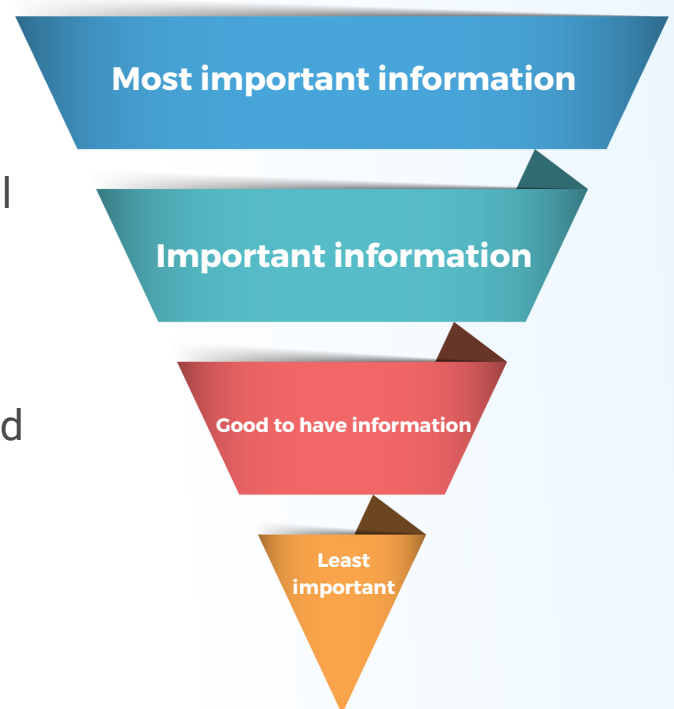

How to Craft a Compelling Post Outline

Here's the SECRET SAUCE: A sharp outline makes writing a great post so much easier.

Once you've identified the idea that will be the central seed to your piece, outlining that idea will allow you to control the flow of information. This is critical, especially early on, because it can be difficult to develop desirable content for your HVAC company blog.

It helps to think like a journalist. Remember, information should be stacked like an upside-down triangle. Start broad, tease the details, and drill down on the specifics of each point further down the post.

Right after your initial introduction and topic tease, include a quick breakdown of what you hope the reader will get out of investing their time in reading the entire piece.

Example Topic Ideas: A sharp outline makes writing a great post so much easier.

- Checklist of homeowner monthly maintenance
- Equipment primer with safety tips for the cold season
- How to perform an at-home summer HVAC check-up
- HVAC FAQs from existing customers

The Role SEO Plays in Outlining Content

From the outside looking in, the world of Search Engine Optimization can seem confusing and quite possibly dangerous. While it's true the rules have always, and will always shift beneath our feet, there's an underlying and unchanging truth within SEO.

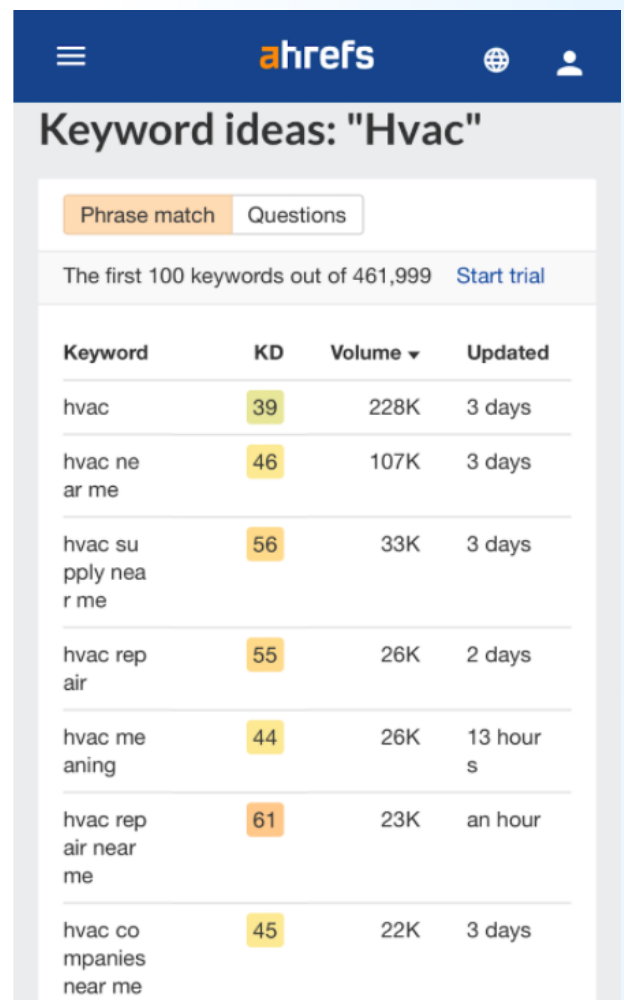

It's our job to tell the search engines what our content is about. Plain and simple.

It's best to think of SEO as a tool to tune how you brainstorm and present your content. Using a keyword research tool, you'll find insights on keyword relevance, association with other terms, related searches, search volume, and other important statistical data that can help inform your content decisions.

Use free (or free to try) keyword research tools like:

- Semrush's Keyword Magic Tool
- Google Keyword Planner
- Answer the Public
- Ahrefs Keyword Generator
- Keyword Sheeter

The ahrefs keyword generator tool, for example, outputs a simple list of frequently searched related keywords. The benefit this tool offers is clearly showing the volume of searches for each keyword and the relative difficulty it will be for fresh content to rank highly:

The screenshot shows the Ahrefs Keyword Generator interface. At the top, there's a blue header with the Ahrefs logo and navigation icons. Below the header, the title 'Keyword ideas: "Hvac"' is displayed. There are two tabs: 'Phrase match' (selected) and 'Questions'. Below the tabs, it says 'The first 100 keywords out of 461,999' with a 'Start trial' link. A table lists the keywords with columns for 'Keyword', 'KD' (Keyword Difficulty), 'Volume', and 'Updated'.

Keyword	KD	Volume	Updated
hvac	39	228K	3 days
hvac near me	46	107K	3 days
hvac supply near me	56	33K	3 days
hvac repair	55	26K	2 days
hvac meaning	44	26K	13 hours
hvac repair near me	61	23K	an hour
hvac companies near me	45	22K	3 days

This is an example output created by ahrefs Keyword Generator.

These tools can help you tune each piece of content, and help inform your overall editorial calendar.

If your HVAC company blog is built on WordPress, you have access to free SEO tool plugins that help with real-time feedback while writing your posts.

The two most popular, Yoast and AIOSEO, offer free versions that can immediately begin helping you improve your content. The insights provided will help you tune your content as you write to be more search-engine friendly.

Quick Tips for Outlining Your Ideas

Once you've identified your topic and targeted SEO keyphrase, it helps to brainstorm a list of questions.

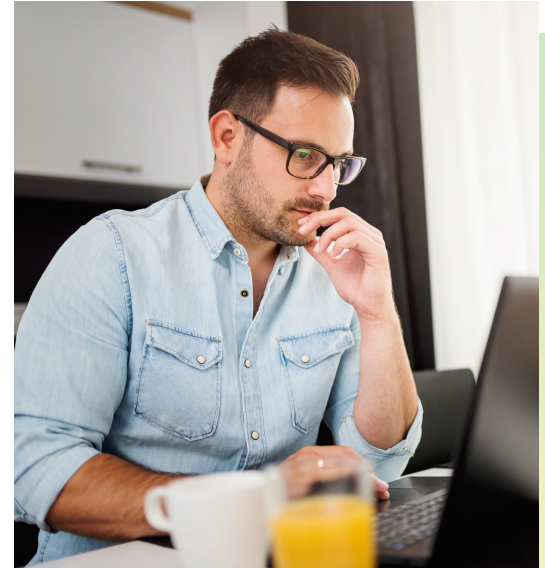

Start with five to seven.

Those questions will become your main sections that you'll then build with the answers to each question.

Cascading Headlines

Your post title is also known as the headline or the H1 tag in HTML. Subheaders range from H2 to H4 depending on the importance of that particular subheading.

So, those main questions you used to develop your idea, will become your H2 tags. For example, this is how these headline sizes look on FieldEdge.com. The formatting of these will vary based on your individual site's design, but the relative sizing is what's important to note:

This is an H1 Headline Example

Only use H1 tags for the main title of your post

This is an H2 Headline Example

Use these headlines for your main sections

This is an H3 Headline Example

Use H3 headlines for subsections within your main sections

Use H4 headlines as asides or breakout examples within your subsections

Your Editorial Calendar and When to Post

Everyone's calendar is going to look a little different. Your bandwidth will dictate just how frequently you'll be able to contribute to your HVAC company's blog. However, this general guidance will help reveal the cadence between types of posts that we've found to be most effective.

Take this example month broken down into a basic four-week grid:

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
	Help Post		Hub Post
			Hub Post
			Hub Post	Help Post
	Hero Post		Hub Post

This rhythm will keep a constant stream of new content appearing on your company's site. And this creates multiple resulting benefits like:

- Google rewards websites for maintaining a consistent cadence on set times/days of the week
- Maintain a regular blog audience when they know when to expect your next article
- New visitors will trickle in more consistently as search engines will serve your fresh content more readily to those searching for the keywords you target

Much like TV shows that develop a devoted audience through a consistent broadcast schedule, your blogs benefit from a predictable cadence as well!

- Mondays: The most traffic - publish your most important posts today!
- Tuesday: Promote new content on social media
- Wednesday: High traffic - keep promoting on social media!
- Friday-Sunday: Lowest traffic

Also, speaking of the importance of developing a regular blog audience, be sure to subscribe to the FieldEdge Blog for free, weekly content that's sure to boost your business growth!

Pro tip: When NOT to Post

Posting anytime from Friday afternoon through Sunday will likely show fewer results in the short term since the internet sees far less traffic during these days.

Both visitors and search engines love predictability and regularity. So find the rhythm that works for you and your business.

How to Write Like a Pro in HVAC Contractor Marketing

When writing, remember to use short, punchy sentences, and stick to an active voice. “In general, the active voice makes your writing stronger, more direct, and, you guessed it, more active,” notes Grammarly.

While our school teachers taught us differently, try to keep paragraphs shorter. Aim for three sentences max. However, we've found two sentences usually work best.

One sentence paragraphs are great for the occasional emphasis of key points.

Dense sections with important info are best when broken down into bullet points:

- Important point one
- Important point two
- Important point three

Remember, you want to keep all your work as easy to scan for a reader as possible.
