A Crash Course in Exclusive Leads

By Chaz Wilke, Staff Writer

By now you are familiar with leads that you can purchase, and leads that you can organically generate. Now it is time to learn about exclusive leads. What are exclusive leads? How are exclusive leads different from shared leads? What is the benefit to the affiliate to sell exclusive leads? And what is the benefit to the lender to buy exclusive leads?

Benefits of Exclusive Leads

Exclusive leads offer a few specific advantages over shared leads. There are two perspectives from which one could view the benefits of exclusive leads: the affiliate, and the lender.

From the lender's perspective, the most important element of an exclusive lead is explained concisely by MyLead Group. "You would be the first company they come in contact with, giving you the advantage over your competitors," its website states.

For a lender, an exclusive lead might cost more but the chance of conversion is greatly increased. Insurance Lead Reviews explains, "You will pay more, but your chance of a sale is greater since you are the only person making contact with the prospect." Also, since it is an exclusive lead, the lender can approach the lead calmly, knowing that the clock and competitors aren't bearing down on him.

An affiliate will likely charge more for an exclusive lead since he can't profit by selling it to multiple parties. Anthony Jones, a business development consultant with Alternative Business Consulting Solutions shares his experience with leads, both exclusive and shared. "If the cost of a lead is very cheap (a couple of dollars per lead) chances are it's a shared lead or a 'non-qualified' Internet lead," he says.

Lenders expect the cost of an exclusive lead to be higher than a shared lead. But if the affiliate does not do his job by qualifying that lead, this may end up harming the affiliate's ability to continue selling exclusive leads at a higher cost.

Exclusive Annuity Leads

Exclusive annuity leads offer an enticing deal for lenders as the size of annuities are often larger than a short-term loan. Annuity leads present the potential for a large payday for both lenders and affiliates. For those unfamiliar, here is a quick breakdown of some common characteristics of annuities and annuity leads:

- Social security could be considered an annuity.
- U.S. News and World Report explain, "[The beneficiary] can fund an annuity with a single payment, or premium, or, as with Social Security, a series of premium payments."
- Some exclusive annuity lead sellers charge up to \$200 per lead.
- Fixed annuities are similar to pensions. This means that the person receiving the check has little involvement with how the annuity funds are invested.

Takeaway

No matter if you are an affiliate or a lender; exclusive leads offer an additional benefit to both parties. For a lender, it might mean a calmer and potentially easier path to conversion. For an affiliate, it might mean a larger commission, provided the lead is qualified. Exclusive annuity leads offer long term income potential for the lender. As an affiliate, exclusive annuity leads offer a large markup over standard lead generation, so long as the affiliate provides qualified exclusive leads that satisfy the buyer.
