Optimize Content for Multiple Target Audiences

By Chaz Wilke, Staff Writer

April 23, 2015

A great piece of content is the Holy Grail for affiliate marketers. But, crafting that great piece of content can be easier said than done. If you find that you've made high quality content that adds value to a target audience, you'll likely see an increase in leads and conversions. But, why stop there?

Content Optimization

Content can live on as a new piece of optimized content for a different target audience. Surely, you'll want to focus your efforts initially on your main target audience. This will be your content's bread and butter, as it has been. But, if your quality content has found success with your target audience, consider repurposing that piece of content for a different audience.

If you've written a great e-book that attracts midlevel business professionals, and you've found your leads and conversions have grown with that target audience, why not see if you can optimize that e-book as an infographic.

It is likely that your infographic might have massive crossover potential. You may find a new audience in stay at home moms. Maybe even college kids will begin sharing your quality content. College kids may be less likely to give over their email for an e-book, and it's likely even less probable that the college kids will actually read your e-book.

But, if you create an infographic that looks sharp and distills the information into an easy to digest and fun to read infographic, then you might find a new demographic clamoring to share your content on social media.

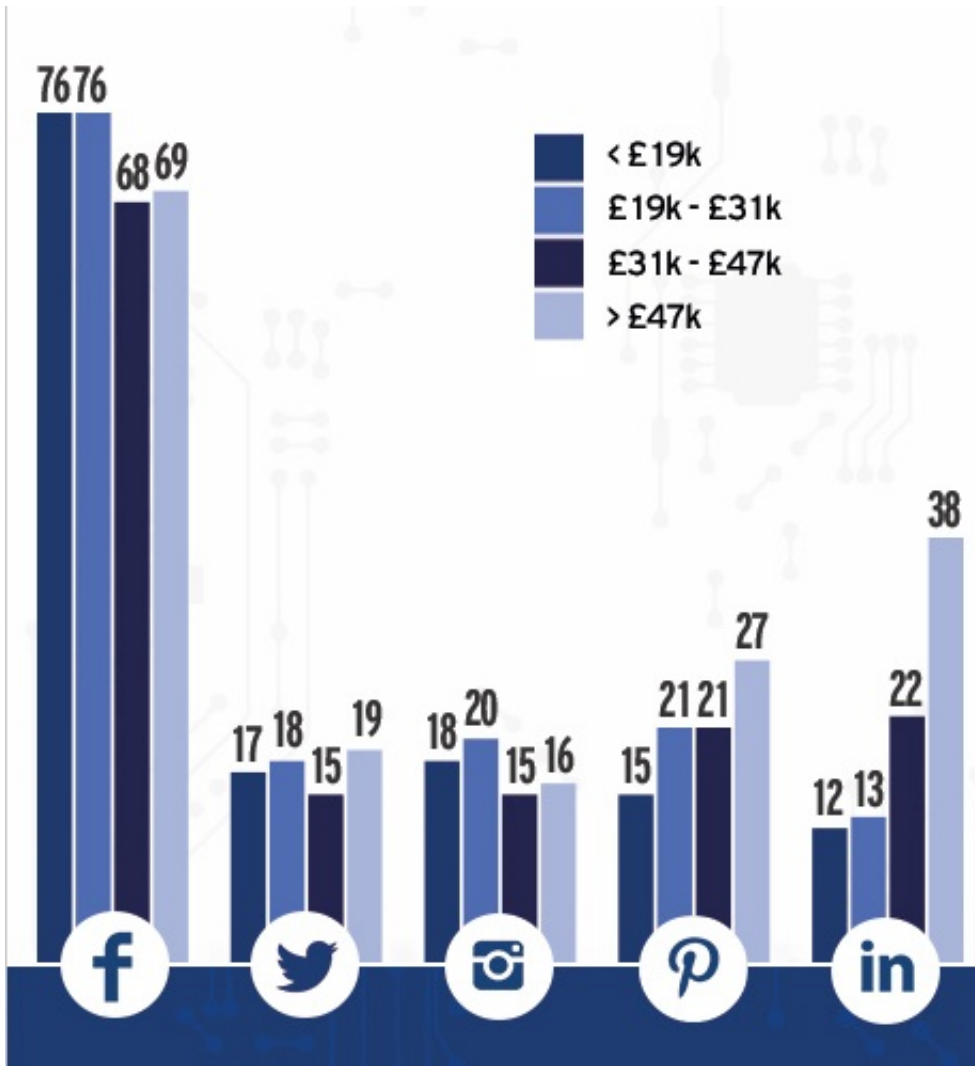

"The companies who apply an old-school marketing approach to the internet are ignoring the fact that social media is the best market research platform in the world," says Lilach Bullock, co-founder of digital marketing agency commsaxis.com.

Target Markets

When searching for a target market, it may be beneficial to understand where those markets tend to visit online. Pew Research Center conducted exhaustive research on the preferred social media platform by salary.

The results might be unsurprising to some.

Facebook takes the lead by a large margin for all salary segments.

LinkedIn skews strongly towards those earning the most using the platform, weakest for those earning the least. But perhaps the most surprising information released by Pew Research Center is the spread on Pinterest.

The lowest earners used Pinterest the least at 15 percent of respondents. And interestingly the highest earner segment used Pinterest significantly more at 27 percent.

So when you're searching for a new target market, it may be important to understand where those target markets tend to visit online.

Takeaway

Great content has the ability to transcend target markets. It may be beneficial to optimize that content for multiple target markets. The information provided in your great content is likely interesting regardless of who reads it. Consider the manner in which you present your information and you'll likely find that you can optimize your great content to draw the attention of any market you please. And that might just help increase your lead conversions.
